My wife Jean Bidlack frequently travels somewhere on our wonderful orb to scientific conferences and other meetings in her world of academic Pharmacology. At various scientific venues she will join with professors and researchers from industry and academia in her field, the pharmacology of opiate addiction in the human brain. This year's 2016 International Narcotics Research conference was held in Bath, UK in the Bath Assembly Rooms meeting halls. Without much comment here are some images from our July 8 to July13 sojourn in Bath.

Dukes Hotel on Pulteney Street, Bath,UK ~ July 10 to July 14. This was our temporary abode in Bath while Jean attended INRC 2016 sessions. The Assembly Rooms where INRC sessions were held were about a 15 minute walk from the Dukes Hotel across the Pulteney Bridge.

Avon River Pulteney Weir & the Pulteney Princess tour boat, Bath, UK looking down river away from Pulteney Bridge). Checking on the WWW this is the turning basin for one end of its many hour long round trips taken each day.

Jean captured this image of me at the stone railing along Grand Parade in Bath, UK, July 10, 2016. Two of three Pulteney Bridge arches are visible in this image looking across the Pulteney Weir. The Dukes Hotel is located a couple of blocks down Great Pulteney Street to the right of the bridge in this image.

Looking up the Avon River towards Pulteney Bridge and Pulteney Weir from North Parade bridge, Bath, UK

Walking up the Avon river after crossing the North Parade bridge on July 10, we found this ominous sign on some machinery of unknown purpose by the side of the river. After hunting a bit on the WWW when we got back home, it is apparently some relic of earlier canal technology still actively used for Avon River water level control to sustain the Pulteney Princess tour boat's operations.

Walking just a few feet further from the ominous warning sign, we captured this image of Grand Parade across the Pulteney Weir from the other side of the Avon River.

Hyperlinks Caveat

At and after the epoch of publishing the latest update of this article on my site, to the best of my knowledge all hyperlinks still point to the WWW pages I intend.
